Fall Magazine 2018

A photograph of a modern dining room. In the foreground, a wooden dining table is set with a vase of yellow tulips, a bowl of lemons, and some bread. Two blue upholstered chairs with wooden frames are visible. In the background, there is a grey cabinet with various items on it, including glasses and a plant. A large, white, geometric light fixture hangs from the ceiling. The text "You bring life to your home. We bring your home to life." is overlaid on the image in a white, serif font.

*You bring life to your home.

Round it out

If you decide spheres are your style, you can repeat this shape throughout the lighting in your home for a consistent aesthetic. Choose one of these favourites from ET2 for your dining room, then round it out with a spherical pendant in your entranceway.

You can do the same thing with a certain finish – like choosing from these gold or black Maxim fixtures, and repeating elements of its style throughout the rest of your home.

Simple, but structured

One of the biggest design trends dominating this fall is the structured, almost sculptural pieces among brands like Artcraft. "I'm drawn to these simpler, but more structured fixtures," says Jenelle Erickson, principal designer for SmithErickson Designs in Calgary (and a regular Robinson Lighting & Bath customer).

With their clean lines and more architectural design, these fixtures are easy to carry through a space by pairing them with simple, clean-lined or minimalist furniture.

Layer up

Often that je-ne-sais-quoi that makes a space feel more useable or desirable is the lighting. The best way to invoke that feeling is through layered lighting.

Start by choosing the perfect chandelier (like any of these stunners from Kichler) or a flush-mount light from Elan. These decorative fixtures cast light downward, so the next step is to create layers of light by illuminating different spots in the room.

In the kitchen for instance, you'll want to cover off general lighting (like potlights), pendant lighting and undercabinet lighting so you can see everything you need while you work. Bonus: add an accent light on its own switch to highlight a design feature in the room.

Matte Attack

With a trend toward neutrals in home design and furniture, there's little wonder we're seeing matte black details on pendants, chandeliers, and even flush-mount vanity lighting (like these sleek beauties from Kuzco).

Paired with a textured finish like white marble, seek matte black to pull together a black-and-white look, or put a spin on the classic.

Easy Breezy

Picking out the right ceiling fan for your space can be easy breezy – as long as you consult with an expert.

“When you’re buying a ceiling fan, you have to think about how high your ceiling is, if it’s sloped, and sourcing the proper downrod. I try to ask the right questions – all the details that will get you the right fixture,” says Amir Fard from Robinson Lighting & Bath Coquitlam.

Into the Wood

Raw materials are finding their way out of the woods in lighting, adding a rustic, earthy ambience to the home. "Lighting has more unique materials lately that have rustic or natural finishes - not so polished," says Tammie Rocke of Rocke Design (and a regular Robinson Lighting & Bath customer).

"Usually I start with materials that people like, pick that special thing, and everything flows from there," she says of the process.

Asymmetrical Electrical

A modular, asymmetrical pendant or chandelier makes a bold statement. But it's important to think about its scale and placement in a room. A general guideline is to have the bottom of your chandelier or kitchen pendant hang 30 to 34 inches above the table – which is lower than you might think!

Il-lumenated

When it comes to choosing lighting, there's lots to think about beyond just the fixture, including the bulbs.

LED lights are six times more efficient than incandescent bulbs, which means savings for you and the environment. LED light fixtures require special dimmer switches, so be sure to coordinate closely with an electrician during any renovation or build. (Set the mood just right with Eurofase's High Tide LED pendant).

Most LED lighting is measured in lumens - a measurement for how much light will be cast. Be sure to distinguish between total and delivered lumens - the delivered lumens factors in all lenses and shade that obscure a portion of the delivered light.

One-piece or wall-hung

There are perhaps more choices than ever in plumbing, especially in the types of toilets available.

It might be best to start with the type of toilet that would suit your space.

Two-pieces are most common, and available in many affordable variations, with the tank and bowl manufactured separately then combined onsite. One-piece toilets are a sleek single fixture option with a low-profile aesthetic, which may fit better in small spaces. A wall-hung toilet is fixed tight to the wall. It doesn't touch the ground for easy, convenient cleaning.

Greater grade of steel

Stainless steel sinks are usually chosen for their durability (like the gorgeous Kohler Smart Divide sink).

But even this quality can range in a stainless steel sink, depending on its grade and gauge. The higher the sink is in nickel content, the higher the grade, which leads to greater durability, strength, and - usually a higher cost.

The gauge is the thickness of the stainless steel. Typical thickness or gauge is 18, 20, or 22. The lower the number, the greater the thickness, which increases water temperature retention and reduces water sound.

Thicker sinks will also be more resistant to temperature variations, hot and cold objects, and be easier to clean.

Jenelle
Erickson

What do people most need to keep in mind when shopping for lighting for their space?

When it comes to lighting, scale is very important. You need to make sure fixtures are the right scale – it's the jewelry or the lipstick to the space, so it shouldn't overpower a room, it should complement the other elements, adding a pop to it.

What's your process for choosing lighting with a client?

When we are selecting lighting or the fixtures, I like to find that one item or inspiration to work off of. Lighting we often leave to the end – I think at that point the client has a better vision of where they're going and the overall vision of the style.

What's one tip you'd give about shopping for lighting or bath products?

You most definitely get what you pay for. I strongly emphasize this with plumbing fixtures especially.

What do people most often learn after working alongside lighting experts?

What people realize afterward is just how easy it can be when they have someone helping them... someone experienced makes it a lot easier for them.

What do you love about bringing clients through the Robinson showroom?

It's customer service. Our rep makes it super easy for us when it comes to price requesting and answering questions we may have. If we don't have the answer to our client's question, they'll get it for us.
